COUNSEL.

- A journey round the world began By taking but one pace: Be not too caser, fittle man, In entering the race.
- The mites increase, he not disturbed: Plan wisely, delve and dig;
- The cate your arms no longer gird Grow from a slender twig. Toil beavely on; in patience wait,

And by the moment live: Choose rather to be good than great, And gain that you may give.

George Hancroft Griffith in Frank Leslie's Illus-

FIRST TIME UNDER FIRE.

The memory of the soldier's first bat-tle will never be forgotten by him. The impressions were burned so deeply into the brain and spirit that a century of peace would not efface or even dim them. Twenty-nine years have passed since I went through the first "baptism of fire," and yet the scenes and events are as fresh and as vivid in the soul vision as is the storm of yesterday eve.

I want to tell you something about it. I shall not name the time nor the place -the living who were with me will remember the facts-for the record I give is historie, is real, not ideal or fanciful, and I wish to have the recital so worded that any man in the world can read it without a feeling of bitterness in any known direction. The picture I give is not for the man who wore this or that uniform. I want a cameo that will outlast the passion that produced the bloody struggle. I do not pretend to give a history of an entire battle; no one man can do this unless he draws upon the experience and observation of others, for each actor in any great battle sees the struggle differently from what it appears to others. I shall relate my own individual experi-ence and observation—what I personally saw and heard of one fiercely fought battle—one memorable in the history of the war-my first passing into and through its flame of fire. A soldier's first buttle in war does not always come at the appointed looked for bour. Many of the volunteers went to the front, expecting to whip out the fight the next morning after arrival—either before or after breakfast—then to return home crowned with immortal honors. But with thousands many weary months elapsed before the opportunity of meeting the foe came in real earnest, and when it did come countless thousands were not expecting it. After my enlistment as a soldier I had not long to wait the coming of the fight. Night had enveloped the camp, and I was dreaming of sunny fields, of smiling meadows, of a happy home-of mother, and all that was near and dear to a linman heart. But the destroying angel came, and all vanished into the realm of sweetened shadow. For a comrade stood beside me with his hand on my bosom. As he leaned over toward my ear I heard him say tremulously—the man's heart in a flutter of emotion:

"Wake up! They are advancing!" Was there the hue on his lips that made me think instantaneously of the line: Whispering with white lips, "The foe-they come!

The first beams of the full morning were penciling the orient sky, and the rays fell upon a group of half a dozen auxious faces gathered around the adjutant's tent. Two horses were thereone with drooping head and limb at at rest; another was panting heavily and recking with smoke as the courier still sat on him. The commanding officer was reading a note, hastily scratched in pencil, under starlight alone.

The officer was en dishabille, Yet 1 heard him speak hurriedly and anxiously to the bugler just called up: "Sound reveille at once, and boots and saddles immediately afterward." Turning around he added, addressing his servant, "Saddle my horse at once, William." Strange it is what a magnetic influence, as it were, that will pervade a mass of men in the hour of danger and duty. Three minutes had not elapsed after the sounds of the last bugle blow had thrilled the camp till the squadrons were forming. "Move the column down the road, captain," said the commanding officer. "I will gailop on and ascertain the real

We passed another and another courier, and then we came to a body of men holding horses behind a clump of trees.

Just then there seemed to be an awful stillness in the morning air, suddenly broken by a noise that sounded strange to me. "What is that?" I asked. "It is the rumbling of their artillery," said Gen. S. Then he turned around, looking us all squarely in the face, and added in a confident tone, "Yes, they are advan ing, and in force."

There was no mistaking the sound that next greeted the ears, there was a clear, ringing report that punctuated the stillness, then there was another and another and the rifle cracks died away. They were the prelude of the battle soun death! A second stnff officer had been sent back to "hurry up the foliantry." The noble fellows were coming. You could hear the deep, muffled hum of their footsteps as the double quicking hur-ried them onward. As they came up I heard the short, quick command: "Move out by the right flank! Into line! Steady, men; steady! I expect every man to do his duty now!"

Move out, and move on, my dear comrades! Alas! many moved on into that column which passed on, never to return. Their first battle was their last,

There was a lull in the firing in front, but out to the leftward volley after vol-ley poured, out upon the morning airthe sun just rising over the hills to our right. I had followed at the gallop the general, who was hurrying to the front. He was more silent than I had ever known him. Suddenly he halted and turned to see who all were about him. "What troops are those?" I asked him doubtfully, as I saw a long line of infantry men double quicking behind a tion from which all our riflemen were to enter the buttle. "My God!" said the general, "that is the enemy!" We were upon them before we were aware of their close proximity. They discovered us, too, at once, and were preparing for the greeting.

"Get out of the roud" shouled the general. There was a clump of trees on either side of the highway upon which he had thus far advanced, "Get out of the road! Don't you see they are bringing the battery to bear upon us from the hill yonder?" I looked, and a white pull of smoke greeted my vision, and the same instant whiz-z-wher-r-r - chee-ee-ce - went a shell right between the general and his staff, and it bounded down the road, exploding in our rear.

The general addressed me again:
"Get out of the road, and gallop back and have the cavalry moved on the flank of that line youder in the field." Another shell came in the mean time. and made the air resonant with the fly ing fragments. Then there was a volley of rifles and a faint cheer near to our flanks-for our infantry were now moving out of the skirt of the woods and opening the battle in earnest.

Capt, Cart, too, had come, and he unlimbered his guns on the battery on the hill in our front, though he soon turned his aim to the infantry line that was nearer, and I heard the shots rattling upon the rails behind which the enemy had fallen.

"Thank God, the infantry are here," said one. They are the men whose ulders move the wheels on to victors I heard the commanding general shout as the long line came hurrying on just as the men emerged from the skirt of woods, "Move on that line behind you

A red and white and blue line of fire answered from the enemy. "Fall down and fire!" I heard an offi-

stood up, and their irregular fire rattled mockingly along the fence. It was the work of but a moment, for a whole brigade in our front answered the fire of the little band. The battery rained grape and canister and shrapnel against the brigade, and now the battle had joined in a vful earnestness all along

Battery replied to battery, hostile brigade replied to hostile brigade, with sheets of iron and leaden fire. There were in the terrific din the hurtling shot, the screaming, screeching shell, and whistling whirr of the deadly minie Amid the roar were the shouts of command, the wailing shrick of the wounded and the means of the dying. The hours were passing, the musitetry was roaring with an unbroken note, the barreries were bellowing at each other, when suddenly there was a deep, dull thud-a mighty force which at once shook the whole battlefield. Two heavily laden calssons were blown up simultaneously. Then there was another sound which could not be mistaken. There was a full in the firing on our right, and the whole earth seemed to be laboring and grounting. Thousands stood listening amid the horrid heil!

Oh, it was the charge of the cavalry! "Charge! charge!" shouted the throats of a dozen officers, and the bugle blasts, ringing out faintly in the din, mingled and died away in the florce shouting of
